manufacturing process, it may become necessary to mount a device, e.g., a semiconductor chip or a display substrate, to another substrate, e.g., a display panel or a motherboard. Existing methods involve aligning the device with the substrate and then bonding the device to the substrate. The bond creates a robust mechanical connection between the device and the substrate while the device and the substrate are aligned to each other. However, this method does not provide for visual alignment of the device with the substrate and does not disclose a means of accurately aligning the device to the substrate. After bonding, the devices are typically mounted within a package that encases the device and that also protects it from the environment. The package must, however, be placed over the device prior to bonding. Accordingly, it is desirable to have a method and structure for bonding a device to a substrate while providing for visual alignment of the device with the substrate. Furthermore, other desirable features and characteristics of the present invention will become apparent from the subsequent detailed description of the invention and the appended claims, taken in conjunction with the accompanying drawings and this background of the invention. In the related art, a semiconductor device is known in which a semiconductor chip is bonded to a chip mounting substrate via a bump (for example, e79caf774b
