Powder metallurgy and its use in the production of metal alloys is well known and described in numerous text books, and commonly used in the production of powders for compounding into metal alloys. While the book "The FDM Process" by R. M. Wade (ISBN 1-56530-030-0) has many useful references, the patent literature has been particularly rich in new developments. For example, Samulski U.S. Pat. No. 5,170,169 discloses a method of preparing boride powders. The art is also filled with publications which disclose specialized processes which are particularly useful with certain alloys, e.g., U.S. Pat. No. 4,781,792 disclosing the e79caf774b paper titled "Association of HbA_{1c} levels with lacunar infarcts in non-diabetic stroke patients" by Dutta et al.,^{[[@ref1]]} we failed to note some important basic facts related to the limitations of the study and the results obtained. It was stated that patients with diabetes were excluded from the study. However, the authors have excluded diabetic patients using glycosylated hemoglobin (HbA_{1c}) levels. Additionally, other authors have tried to show the presence of HbA_{1c} levels alone as a risk factor for the development of lacunar infarcts. \[[@ref2]\] The exclusion
