In a statement published in the official newspaper of the Chinese Foreign Ministry Friday, the Chinese embassy in Washington was ordered to contact the U.S. embassy with Beijing's stance on a potential U.S. military strike. The statement comes a day after White House Press Secretary Sean Spicer said the administration was "actively evaluating" the possibility of military action in response to a suspected chemical attack in Syria. "As a great friend and partner of the United States, China will closely follow and evaluate the developments and the impact in Syria," the statement, attributed to the Chinese embassy in Washington, read. "We will make stern representations to the U.S. side through diplomatic channels and take all necessary measures to firmly protect our legitimate interests." Trump is scheduled to meet with Xi during the G20 summit in Argentina on Friday. Shortly after the two leaders' meeting, China's state-run newspaper Global Times published a piece which called for the Trump administration "to learn its lesson," adding that a strike on Syria would never happen. The statement said the U.S. has "lost its credibility as a
